All the dissertations will be carried on the university website once they are submitted, unless they meet what we regard as “exceptional conditions”. In the latter case, a dissertation summary could be accepted instead.

The “exceptional conditions” include the cases, in which:

- some figures or pictures do not appear on the internet properly (e.g. solid figures)
- some information or data is not expected to be seen in public over a year since the degree was awarded, due to the concerns of copyright protection and personal information protection the candidate is possibly placed under unfavorable conditions by carrying his/her dissertation on the internet over a year; for example,
 - because the candidate has published some content of his/her dissertation in journals that prohibit their articles to be shown in public outside their journals
 - due to the concerns of patent application

* you will be asked to submit a document confirming its publication when you submit the final version of your dissertation.
